

Change, on your terms.

A result that fits who you are now.

Bodies change. Faces change. Lifestyles change. What you want at 25 isn't always what you want at 45. That's not a contradiction. That's just life.

Maybe you're considering an aesthetic change. Maybe it's your first-ever cosmetic or plastic surgery procedure. Maybe there's a result from years ago that doesn't fit who you are now. Maybe there's a detail you've always wanted to refine, or work from another surgeon you've never quite loved.

Every one of those is a good place to start.

The point isn't to chase a trend or fix something because you can. It's to get clear on what you want for yourself, then find the most "you" way to get there.

Sometimes that's a first procedure. Sometimes it's a refinement. Sometimes it's a second opinion on work done elsewhere.

Whatever brings you to a point a change, our goal at Central Ohio Plastic Surgery is simple: a result that fits who you are now, and a plan to help you get there.

EVERY PATH

Starts With a Conversation

Change doesn't come in just one shape.
Neither should your options.

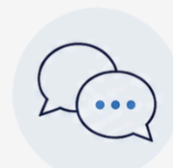

FIRST PROCEDURE

New to cosmetic or plastic surgery?
We'll start with a conversation about what you want,
not what's trending.

REFINEMENT

Already had work done
and want to fine-tune it?
Small adjustments can make a meaningful difference.

SECOND OPINION

Not thrilled with a result from another surgeon?
We'll take an honest look and talk through what's possible.

What Can Be Revised?

MORE THAN YOU MIGHT THINK.

Revision or corrective procedures may help improve the following:

BREAST SURGERY RESULTS

Changes in size, shape, symmetry, position, or changes that happen over time.

FACIAL SURGERY RESULTS

Areas that could benefit from additional refinement, balance, or correction.

SCARRING

Some scars can be improved with surgical revision or other treatment options.

INJECTABLES

Certain filler results may be adjusted or, in some cases, dissolved.

WORK DONE BY ANOTHER SURGEON OR PROVIDER

If you're unhappy with a previous result, a second opinion can help you understand what may be possible.

Not every result can or should be changed. The first step is understanding what you're seeing, what you'd like to improve, and what can realistically be done.

The Things Patients Search at 11:47 PM.

What are you wondering?

Q Can a facelift look too tight?

Q BOTOX or filler?

Q Can another surgeon fix work I don't like?

🕒 11:47 PM

You know the questions. The ones that feel easier to type into Google than say out loud.

Here are three of the most frequent middle-of-the-night asks about plastic and reconstructive surgery.

Can a facelift look too tight?

Honestly, yes — it can happen. But that's not how a good one is supposed to turn out.

Done well, a facelift should make you look like a rested version of yourself, not a different person. Whether it looks natural comes down to a few key things: the surgeon's technique, your anatomy, and knowing where to stop.

Do I need BOTOX or filler or both?

Depending on what your concern is, you might need one, the other, both, or honestly, sometimes neither.

BOTOX softens the muscle movement behind expression lines. Filler adds back volume and can reshape certain areas. Dr. Lichten can talk you through all your options.

Can another surgeon fix a result I'm not happy with?

Often, yes — it's more common than you'd think. Revision surgery can address things like asymmetry, contour issues, scarring, or positioning from a previous procedure. That said, revision work tends to be trickier than the original surgery, so it's worth talking to Dr. Lichten about your specific case.

Bottomline? No amount of searching can tell you what's right for you.

Your anatomy, your history, and what your goals are will never show up in a search result.

So do your online research, but don't let a search bar make your final decision.
